

HOW TO BE A GREAT GAME MASTER GM NOTES

The Real Reasons Why We Play DnD & other RPGs

Full video link: https://youtu.be/UrlleC-ahf8

We are in chapter 2 of our work through of The Practical Guide to Becoming a Great GM. And today we are looking at your reasons for roleplaying. Why do we roleplay?

When we get down to it, there are 4 primary reasons why we roleplay. If we can understand what these reasons are and how we can use them to our advantage – that puts us in a much better position to run a more fun and fulfilling game for everyone at the table.

The 4 reasons why we roleplay are:

- 1. Entertainment
- 2. Escapism
- 3. Success
- 4. Socialization
- Entertainment
  - A narrative experience
  - Rigid rules and a story element structured rules for a structured story.
  - $\circ$   $\;$  We need to feed the source of entertainment for ourselves and our players.
  - There is a structure we expect a specific structure which we as the GM must provide.
  - We like patterns and we like to be able to predict those patterns.
- Escapism
  - To forget about real life issues for the duration of the game.
  - Suspension of disbelief we accept magic or insane physics or super heroes provided that they have rules and reasons.
  - $\circ$   $\,$  Consistency is king rules bring consistency and your world space must be consistent.
- Success
  - Achieving the goal what were the goals of the players (you too GM), and the PCs and were they successfully achieved?
  - Mechanics and story both components must allow for success (and setbacks)
  - Success requires effort there must be a reasonable chance of failure in order for there to be a success at the end.
- Socialization

- We are a group and must behave like a group, understanding the inherent dynamics and politics therein.
- You as the GM are the facilitator the GM is responsible for the table and those around it.
- We are all in this together! Everyone at the table is responsible for the collective outcome.

Notes:

